Northwestern's main Web server, www.northwestern.edu, also known as "nuinfo", will be unavailable for a period of time on Sunday morning, Nov 27, 2005.

We expect the actual interruption of web service to be about a half hour, but for planning purposes please assume that it may be unavailable any time from 8 AM until 11 AM.

This is being done to change the IP address of the nuinfo server, and to move it to a different zone of the data center's firewall configuration. This should improve security and reliability of various services.

Content providers should not try to update sites on the nuinfo server Sunday morning.

After these changes are complete, we expect that web content providers will be able to access the server much as before, from on-campus locations or via the NU VPN server, with ssh, sftp, or ftp.

The following web sites are hosted on the nuinfo server and will be unavailable:
